HYBRID

A look at the tensions facing Inuit youth in Nunavik and how child psychiatry can better support culturally safe care.

Learning objectives

- Identify major contextual factors and tensions affecting Inuit youth in transition to adulthood.
- Critically reflect on the ways providers and mental health systems can help mitigate or intensify these tensions.
- Integrate this reflection into practical strategies to strengthen culturally safe, responsive care for Inuit youth.

Ana Gómez-Carrillo, MD is a psychiatrist whose work focuses on the philosophy and anthropology of psychiatry, with an emphasis on integrative approaches to assessment and care. Her research combines person-centered and precision models for depression, explores the intersubjective nature of diagnosis, and examines metaphors in illness narratives. She also develops culturally adapted psychological interventions and web-based mental health tools.
