Session chaired by Nasr Farooqi, MD

January 15, 2026

12:00 PM – 1:00 PM (ET)

G-23 (ICFP), 4333 Côte-St-Catherine Rd., Montreal QC H3T 1E4

IN PERSON ONLY

The realities of coercion in outpatient mental health care: what it looks like, why it happens, and how clinicians manage it in practice.

Learning objectives

- Review the literature on coercion in community mental health services and underlying causes.
- Explore the concept of procedural justice and its use as a counterpoint to coercion.
- Discuss clinical cases that illustrate these themes in day-to-day practice.

Arash Nakhost, MD, PhD is a psychiatrist providing comprehensive psychiatric care to adults, including diagnostic assessment, medication management, and psychotherapeutic interventions, with a focus on mood, anxiety, and psychotic disorders. He is committed to evidence-based, patient-centred, and collaborative clinical practice.
